Above The Fold Above The

Above the fold is the upper half of the front page of a newspaper or tabloid where an important news story or photograph is often located. Papers are often displayed to customers folded so that only the top half of the front page is visible. Thus, an item that is "above the fold" may be one that the editors feel will entice people to buy the paper. Alternatively, it reflects a decision, on the part of the editors, that the article is one of the day's most important. By extension, the space above

In the early days of publishing, 'above the fold' was a term used for content that appeared on the top half of the front page of a newspaper. When newspapers were displayed on a newsstand, the headlines and lead stories that appeared above the fold were the most visible, and catchy headlines and vivid imagery were commonly used to attract readers' attention, convincing them to buy the paper.

Above the fold is an important principle in web design. It describes the part of a website that can be seen directly under the page's call to action. Even though most studies now assume that users (to a certain extent) are used to scrolling, many marketers are convinced that important content still belongs at the top.
