Knowing what marine mammals eat is one of the cornerstones of marine mammal science, and is essential to understanding the life history and conservation needs of marine mammals. Diets have been traditionally determined by identifying and measuring prey items in spews, scats, stomachs, and intestines—and are being increasingly determined using DNA, fatty acids, and stable isotope analyses.

Marine mammals live in and around the ocean. They are warm-blooded, breathe air, have hair at some point in their lives, give birth to live young (as opposed to laying eggs), and nourish their young by secreting milk. Dolphins, whales, seals, sea lions, walruses, polar bears, manatees, and dugongs (manatee relatives) fall into this category.
