Global health players continue to do too little to address the very real impact of gender and issues, such as power and politics, norms, access, vulnerability and violence, on people's health. The consequences of inaction are grave: For example, a baby girl born in 2017 can expect to live 4 years more than a baby boy born on the same day and in some countries that life expectancy gap is 11.7 years or more.

February, 2001. Globalization has impacted upon gender relations in complex and contradictory ways. The centralization of power within the sovereign State that has been fragmented by globalization was not predicated upon, nor necessarily supportive of, equality between women and men. The power structures of the nation State have been organized around patriarchal assumptions that have accorded to men monopoly over power, authority and wealth.
