This is the problem of specifying the historicity of the post-colonial city in globalising Asia, just as the civic leaders have become reflexive and active in narrating their city's history and turning it into heritage. The post-colonial city is finally coming of age and experimenting with urban forms to find its place in the world.

Between History and Heritage: Post-Colonialism—

Colonialism and slavery were central to the national economy from the 17th to the 19th centuries. Around a third of the properties now in our care have direct connections to wider colonial histories, often in a way that's reflected in collections, materials and records that are visible at those places.

National Trust publishes new survey report on links—

For 500 years British colonialism was fundamental to British social, economic, political, and cultural life. This was allied with a belief in white racial and cultural superiority. This is reflected across many National Trust places and collections.

Recently the decision to change the name of Colston Hall provoked widespread debate. GW4's Bridging the Gap project has now held a workshop at Dyrham Park, near Bath, to bring together researchers, participants from the heritage sector, community history groups and creative practitioners to consider how colonial history is represented in our regional heritage narratives.

HOW IS COLONIAL HISTORY REPRESENTED IN OUR REGIONAL HERITAGE?

colonialism was just simply because historic persons believed it to be just, but this would obviously be deeply controversial when one considers the character of colonial history. At some times and in some places, colonial domination involved multiple instances of genocide, slavery, rape and sexual

Colonialism and Postcolonialism

This has generated some unease about disciplinary identity, an anxiety revealed by recent debates about the legitimacy of the terms 'historical geography' and 'geographical history'. For all its thematic diversity, however, 21st-century historical geography has become increasingly focused on the recent past, a trend partly determined by the need for reliable, spatially extensive data but also ...

Historical Geography—Articles—Making History

This the main difference between history and heritage. What is History. History is basically the study of the past. It tells us about the events and incidents that took place in the past. The term history can denote the history of the human race, the origin of civilization or even the events related to the conception of a place or an institution.
