Facing the jobs crisis 07 July 2020

- Unemployment has soared in the OECD area since the start of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Policymakers have taken action to safeguard workers and firms, but as the coronavirus crisis continues, more targeted action will be needed to stop the jobs crisis from becoming a social crisis.

- Towards an employment-centred social policy. Progress in combating unemployment is uneven across countries, and the OECD-area unemployment rate will only decline very slowly through 1999 to about 7 per cent, or more than 35 million job-seekers. Therefore, reducing unemployment and expanding job opportunities remain a high priority.
