Space Practicality The Peugeot RCZ coupe is attractive to drive as it is attractive on the eye and the purse strings. Its large interior is very deceptive once you sit inside compared to its medium size exterior, but once comfortably settled a light touch on the accelerator is all it takes to embark on amazing driving experience.

Peugeot has given us some of the best cars ever made and it gave us another taste of what it can do in 2010 with the RCZ coupe. A revelation on the road with superb handling, THP 200 engine is the pick of the range, available with HDi diesel. Lower powered version of 1.6-litre THP engine lacks zest, notchy gearchange, pointless back seats.

Peugeot's in-house manual is solid enough; it's not the slickest shifter but does the job. Overall, the manual RCZ is much sharper and more capable around a track than you might expect from such a design-driven concept. Peugeot then had us test the less powerful automatic version of the road loop.

Striking a balance between style and practicality, comfort and handling and value versus premium feel, the pretty Peugeot RCZ is something of a hit in a long line of disappointments for the firm. Designed to take on the might of the Audi TT and VW Scirocco it offers one diesel and two petrol engines plus a manual or automatic gearbox.
