Advanced Search. Search Menu. Judith B. Steinhoff explores the fourteenth century as a liminal age for art in Siena (p. 5). She acknowledges that the " Golden Age " of Sienese painting arrived early in the century while her major interest reaches into the era after the Black Plague, 1348 – 1349, and continues through the last decades of the century. In this later era she finds an " extremely sophisticated and self-conscious sponsorship of art " intended to promote both religious and ...

ON MID-TRCENTO SIENESE PAINTING. For many decades after its publication in 1951, Meiss ' s book, Painting in Florence and Siena After the Black Death provided the dominant model for understanding painting of the second half of the fourteenth century. In that now-classic work, Meiss advanced his theory that the calamitous plague of 1348 had a devastating impact on trecento culture and the art it produced.

In Sienese Painting after the Black Death: Artistic Pluralism, Politics, and the New Art Market, Judith B. Steinhoff accepts that such a change did take place and argues that it was due to shifting demographics that set in motion alterations in workshop organization and patronage, which stimulated a style that embraced " continuity and change. " Steinhoff rejects notions that Sienese art of the second half of the trecento is backward-turning, mannered, and artistically weaker than that of ...
